A Gay Town With a Sad Name.

WEEPING WATER,

The Future Seat of Cass County.

"There is power in a name," is an old saying and in many ways a true one. Weeping Water, Neb., has the advantage of many other towns in that it has a most romantic name, and on that account it has always been a favorite with writers. Time and again the story has been told of the terrible battle between two hostile bands of savages and how the conquered were massacred on the field of battle. Then came the Indian women, the wives and daughters of fallen warriors, year daughters of fa'len warriors, year after year, to mourn over the dead. Hence the name Weeping Water, given first to the little creek that flowed through the batt'e field and afterward to the town built on its banks. Why can't some poet make an epic poem from this bit of romance and the newspaper men would be saved the trouble of hashing it up every few mouths. At first the name may have been appropriate, at least to the Indian, for nothing can be more sad than a battle field whereon the flower of a nation or tribe has fallen, but at present it is far from being so. There is not the isast semblance

so. There is not the last semblance of weep in the town for how can men weep in the town for how can men weep when business is brisk and profits large. It is possible to distinguish a Weeping Water man as far as you can see him from the smile of satisfaction on his features. The business men have reason to be happy for no town have reason to be happy for no town in the country is in a more flourishing condition. The statement made by a railroad man, who ought to know, may serve to give some idea of the extent of business done at Weeping Water. He says that there is as much business done at that atton as at all others combined on the line of the Missouri Pacific between Omaha and Atchison. This would seem almost an exaggeration, but it is pretty close to the truth. The railroad will be a great benefit to the town, as it will supply the need long felt, of between town. have reason to be happy for no town will supply the need long felt, of better transportation to the larger markets. The train dispatcher's office has been transferred from Hiawaths to Weeping Water. Each year the town is becoming more important as No.275, Four lots on McLellan street, near shot tower, $125, $12 will supply the need long felt, of battown is becoming more important as a market for live steck, and it draws the stock raisers from a lavge section of country. Stock are brought into Weeping Water and sold even from the very suburbs of Plattsmouth. The grain business is also becoming very important. A new grain warehouse is being built by an Omaha firm, and two more elevators will be built sometime during the summer. The people have not given up the old contest of making their town the county seat, and they are confident that they will appropriate and adjuding Sacred Heart Convent grounds, 8190.0.

was taken to Plattsmouth by a majority of only 37 votes. Weeping Water being located near the center of the county, is certainly the best place for the county seat. The number of new buildings that have been put up within the past eight months is something wonderful. The combined cost of these buildings amounts to over $95,000. A new hotel, the Gibbon house, has been built and fitted up in elegant style. Mr. E. K. Dunbar, formerly of St. Joe, is the proprietor. Many towns much larger than Weeping Water are not able to show as good a hotel or one that is as well kept. Plattsmouth capitalists are about to start a new 1221. The county of St. 1232.
